Strict disciplines impact adversely on children's abilities

Children are expected to obey different rules either at home or at school. Strict discipline is sometimes important, but I argue that it would have an adverse impact on children's problem-solving abilities.

Some people are strong advocates of imposing rules that rules can hold children accountable for their behavior and to help them develop good behavior patterns from a young age. Unlike adults, children are normally not aware of the consequences of bad behavior, and setting rules can help them realise how to behave in a socially acceptable way. For example, children can learn how to show good manners and get along with others, which would be important skills in adult life. If no rules forbid them to use bad language or bully others, they will not know how to deal with social relationships in adulthood.

However, there are concerns that rules may not have a positive influence on children, if those parents who establish the strict rules give priority to children's obedience. Children will rely heavily on rules and may not be able to solve problems independently. For example, they may not know how to manage time themselves, as a result of strict upbringing, and they are not able to decide what to do in the workplace without their parents' direction. They are unlikely to achieve success in their careers.

In my view, strict rules can stifle children's creativity and they are not able to solve problems in different ways. They dare not put their ideas into practice, since they are afraid of being punished if they disobey rules. If they are required to solve math problems in one way, they will rarely consider other approaches. The problems in the real world are complex and they cannot tackle these problems without using imagination.

The problems of population to urban areas

These days many people from rural areas have chosen to migrate to cities. They may believe that they are more likely to find employment and enjoy a better quality of life, but the movement of population to urban areas can cause many problems.

There are two main reasons why these people have made this decision. Firstly, cities are more densely populated and there are more job opportunities available, so they may earn more money. This means that they can improve living standards and afford more consumer goods than ever before. By contrast, employment opportunities are scarce in rural areas, due to the fact that many industries are underdeveloped and many inhabitants' buying power is limited. Another reason is that city dwellers have easy access to public services, including education and health care, and enjoy better standards of living. Young couples who used to live in the countryside intend to send their children to good schools in urban areas, so as to break the cycle of poverty.

The increased number of urban dwellers can put huge pressure on housing and facilities in cities. Some cities are unable to accommodate a large population because of the shortage of land. Many migrants end up living in slums and enduring poor living conditions, because urban facilities fail to meet the growing demand for clean water, dispose of household waste effectively and manage sewage.

Another problem associated with a rural-to-urban shift is that rural-urban income disparity will grow, instead of diminishing. Young people who are ambitious, energetic, hardworking and creative prefer to go to the cities in search of educational and employment opportunities. The shortage of labor has thus become a problem in rural communities and it is not easy to revitalize the local economy. In cities, some young people may choose to commit crimes because of the widening gap between rich and poor.

	2 people who used the image macro
	1 person who did not use the image macro

Result

Interview notes seen on the attached files.

The feedbacks are as follows:

people	creator	user	don't use
Why did you create/ use this kind of image macro? /Why didn't you use them?	A good way to express feelings!	Cute and like Mr. Yuan (a reading teacher in our college). A good way to express feelings!	It was a serious event, and it would be inappropriate to use such funny image macro to describe it.
Why didn't you use words to express how you felt? /Did you say anything about the test afterwards? How?	Words were used, too. Like to use both words and images. Don't think words can perfectly express feelings.	Simple, clear, and funny.	Took a photo of my test card and said something about what happened during the test.
Have you ever thought that	No...But it makes some sense, because Now who would post heaps of words except our parents? Sending images is convenient.	Followed the trend.

How do you think about those people who use such image macro?			I don't agree with them but, it's okay as long as they are happy.

Analysis

Image macros are popular among people these days, and there must be some reasons behind such prevalence.

In the interviews, most of our interviewees mention that image macro serves as a good instrument for expressing feelings. Indeed, compared to the purely text output, using image macro is more direct in expressing feelings. Images carry multiple and complex messages, which can reach out to you at a glance, and which is what text cannot easily fulfill. For example, the difficulty in expressing a mixed feeling of resignation, embarrassment, and others along, with words, can be changed into the situation where such mixture of feelings can be perfectly and effectively conveyed with a single image macro.

Some interviewees also mention that image macro is funny and the use of it makes the conversation less serious. Naturally, we tend to regard the use of pictures in expressing ideas or feelings to be less formal, comparing to the use of words. Pictures are seldom adopted in contracts or laws. But nowadays the use of image macro actually marks a new way of modern communication. People's using image macro to complain about TEM4, implies their attitude to a great extent, that is, they do not want their complaints to be too formal, seemingly, less serious "complaints". On the contrary, the comments written by our teachers about TEM4 purely with texts, are, of no doubt, actual "complaints".

At that time, under the bombardment of the mainland netizens, tens of thousands of non-repetitive image macro emerged in large numbers. Some vulnerable Taiwan netizens reported such behavior to the Facebook website, blaming that the mainland netizens' image macro was too brutal. And there were also some Taiwanese netizens who stole the image macro from the mainland netizens and re-created them to fight back.

Of course, no way the mainland netizens were going to stand for such situation. Correspondingly, they took some fabulous strategies. For instance, they wrote some words such as "only taken by citizens in The People's Republic of China" on the image macro, to force those Taiwan netizens who attempted to steal image macro have to admit that he is a Chinese.

Conclusive remarks

Our findings suggest, that learners can write ritualistic essays with a borrowed identity and authoritative voice under a prescriptive and conservative pedagogy, and they are equally capable of producing social intervention action with their own voices, should they be facilitated by a more descriptive and liberal pedagogy.
